

Below is the burndown chart for sprint 2, based on the number of issues in the JIRA board that were not finished. In the middle of the chart, you can see that there is a bump, representing an increase of issues. This addition was due to our team re-designing our workflow (specifically priority and structure of tickets) after discussing in a scrum meeting. We figured to divide larger tickets into smaller ones, which explains the increase in number. For future sprints, we plan to delegate time at the start to assign story points and break up any larger stories into smaller ones, so that our burndown charts will look better compared to this one.
